

Roots & Repair

Dr. Corey J. Henderson, DrPH, MPA

Understand the history. Recognize the connections.
Take a step toward repair.

PUBLIC HEALTH SCHOLAR | SPEAKER | WRITER

Dr. Corey J. Henderson examines historical trauma and its reverberating effects on Black health, communities, identity, and public life. His work brings public health research into conversation with history, theology, and lived experience.

His 2017 Morgan State University doctoral dissertation explored Black Baltimore residents' experiences during the transition from segregation to integration, identifying themes of harm and resilience. The Sotero-Henderson conceptual model connects policy, trauma responses, community conditions, and intergenerational transmission.

THREE WAYS TO BRING THE WORK INTO THE ROOM

01 How History Lives With Us

30-45-minute talk + questions

Historical context, present-day connections, community resilience, and practical next steps.

02 Community Conversations

75-90 minutes | approximately 8-15 adults

Guided reflection, voluntary participation, community strengths, and one shared action.

03 From Understanding to Repair

Four-session series | pacing agreed with the host

Acknowledge history; examine what carries forward; strengthen connection; build an action plan.

For churches, community organizations, educators, and leaders. Engagements are shaped around the host's audience and goals. Availability, format, and fees are confirmed before booking.

Educational and facilitated discussions; not diagnosis or treatment. Personal disclosure is optional. The app supports continued learning between gatherings.
